The purposed by the city planning commission to engage this services of a landscape architect and city planning enginers of national fame to came here and make a proliminary survey and report on a broad and consistant program of city planning. The cummission has done a great deal of work in preparation for such a survey. The agises of the commission, himself trained and experienced in these special branches, has curried on a number of lines of the city of today and temperature. Theor are numerous ways in which the general appearance of the city can be improved. All our peries can be improved if there be some guidance from men specially trained in such work. We can have more ornamental planting throughout the city. We should acquire more park appears. There is need for the opening of certain direct fractic mates to save time and distance and relieve consisting mates to save time and distance and relieve consisting a chan-up during the exposition. This fraction is customary when circuses and other attractions come to a bettered.

There is a charge yet to create a "civic center" with some public bioldings attractively grouped. Soon it will be late to do anything about this, but there is yet time. In many ways minor errors and neglects can be connected to the great gain of all the citizens, and the big problems ought to be met squarely and disposed of without more delay.

It is fortunate that the city planning commission has discovered to teach the city planning commission has discovered to the city planning commission has disco

It is fortunate that the city planning commission has determined to tackle the problems with energy and far seeing wisdom. With a broad consistent program in hand, planned for the long future, we can make every dollar buy twice as much as if we went or spending immense sums in a more or less haphazard way.

Climate

BY WALT MARON.

OR BALMY size I've siways wished, and now I have my heart's desire; the I' finest climate ever dished surrounds me as I crank my byre. The summer brings as sireling heat, but from the san cool breezes blow; the winter has no above or sheet to fill theumatic legs with wee. But when I lay me down to alsop I drawn of Hansas every night; of Kansas, where wild blimards sweep, and summer heat is just a fright. Some day, no doubt, I will depart for Eden, where all things are fine, where scalding teardrops never start, and grier and wor take in their sign. There with the saints I hope to roum along the crystal river's above, exulting in that final hanse where sorrow tooks in nevermore. But still my thoughts will wander theme at times, when channess are stilled;

I'll lean against the jasper fence, and with strange longings I'll be filled. Strange longings for the old clin trees beneath whose boughs I used to stray; strange longings for the Kamas braces, that liew our county seat away. New splendess rise at every turn, new glottes every bour I find; yet my old heart must over yearn for those dear scenes I tell behind.
